Organization and Performance: Understanding the Diversity of Firms

14 & 15 November 2008
Maison franco japonaise, Tokyo, Japan

Call for papers

Topic

Various contributions, using different methodologies (e.g. productivity analysis, institutional approaches, management analyses, etc.) have recently emphasized the increasing diversity of Japanese firms in terms of performance and organization. Moreover, this increasing heterogeneity concerns firms of similar size and operating in the same environment (e.g. sector). The purpose of this workshop is, beyond the Japanese case, to gather papers which contribute to the understanding of the diversity of firms' organization and performance, from both comparative and historical perspectives.

Topics of Interest

More precisely, this workshop aims at gathering various empirical and theoretical approaches, which are concerned with this general question. A non-exhaustive list of topics is:

Methodology and data issues

- Original surveys and databases
- Measures of the heterogeneity of firms' performance
- Measures of the heterogeneity of firms' organization

The heterogeneity of firms and performance

- Determinants of performance
- Correlation and causality between organization and performance
- Emerging new models of organization
- The role of institutional/regulatory environment

Determinants of the evolution of the heterogeneity of firms

- Measuring and assessing the evolution of the heterogeneity of firms
- Existence of convergence / divergence mechanisms
- Impact of innovation, internationalization, changing economic environment (e.g. exchange rates, taxes), deregulation and institutional reforms on the heterogeneity of firms
- Cycles and heterogeneity of firms

Organizational diversity and institutional change

- Diversity of organization at the firm level
- Heterogeneity of firms and diversity of capitalism
- Understanding the institutional change when organizations are diverse

Both international comparisons as well as a depth country or industry case studies are welcome. Further historical and long term studies on these topics also fit to our conference purpose.
