CURRENT PROJECTS

The Japanese Corporation: Institutional Erosion and Organizational Heterogeneity

The project examines the on-going transformations in Japanese corporate governance with special attention to how institutional erosion and reforms impact organizational practices across corporations. Particular focus will be placed on how capital market pressures and shareholder activism are impacting the role of employees within the firm.

Changing Boundaries of the Firm and Employee Representation

(With Mari Sako, Director of Research, Said School of Business, Oxford University).

The project investigates how employment systems (including worker representation and participation mechanisms) affect the boundary of the firm in industries experiencing major restructuring. Empirically, we compare matched firms in Japan and Germany

Continuity and Discontinuity in Institutional Analysis

(Project Coordinators Wolfgang Streeck and Kathleen Thelen). Explores general properties of institutional change through empirical analysis of contemporary political economy with particular focus on incremental forms of change (institutional erosion, learning, etc.)
